James Stewart

"James is a behavioural and spatial ecologist by training and is currently using automated behavioural testing methods to explore cognitive abilities in sheep. The ultimate aim of this research is to develop behavioural and cognitive markers for early onset Huntington Disease (HD). He is also involved in related experiments to characterise electrophysiological markers of neurodegenerative disease in the sheep brain."

Publications: